

Meet the Economists ...

Kate McLoughlin

*Senior Economist,
Reserve Bank of Australia*

Why did you decide to become an economist?

Because the economy is always changing and all answers aren't figured out yet. The work is always interesting and challenging.

How did you become an economist?

I had a chance meeting with some interesting and friendly economists at the federal Treasury that sparked my interest, and then I applied for their graduate program.

What do you do from day to day?

I work with my colleagues to investigate, understand and debate changes in the Australian economy using data, qualitative information, logic and a healthy scepticism.

What's the best thing about your job?

I love trying to untangle complex issues with my colleagues and answer lots of 'what, when, why' questions that have important consequences for people's wellbeing across Australia.

And when you're not at work?

I'm hiking or swimming, learning to draw again, hanging with my pups, Theo & Peanut, and travelling to new places when I can.

Explore economics.
